NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Abraham S. Hewitt, former Mayor of New York, and for many years Representative in Congress, died at 6 o'clock this morning in his eighty-first year. He had been critically ill ten days. With him at the moment of death were his wife, his three sons and three daughters.

Mr. Hewitt has been in feeble health for some months, and was attacked with obstructive jaundice January 8. From the first it was realized by attending physicians, Dr. Keyes and Dr. Knapp, Jr., that there was probably no hope of the aged patient's recovery. The following Sunday, it was thought that Mr. Hewitt could not survive the night, and the members of his family were summoned to his bedside, but his vitality kept him alive for a week longer. Thursday, Mr. Hewitt rallied so strongly that he might recover, but the following night a relapse occurred, and it was then evident that the end was not far off.

A slight improvement was noted Saturday morning, but late that night the physician notified Hewitt's brother, H. Cooper Hewitt, that death was imminent, and the other children, Edward R. Hewitt, Erskine Hewitt, Mrs. J. O. Green, Mrs. Sarah Hewitt and Miss Elizabeth G. Hewitt were summoned, and with their mother remained by the bedside until the end.

The funeral service, which will be conducted by Bishop Potter, will be held in Calvary Church, of which Mr. Hewitt was a member, Wednesday.

Sketch of His Life.

In many respects, Abram S. Hewitt was the quaintest figure in New York politics. Born at Haverstraw, July 21, 1822, he was sent to the common schools of New York City, won a scholarship at Columbia College and graduated at the head of his class in 1842. He was admitted to the bar in 1845, but was compelled to give up practice on account of his health. Later he entered the employ of Peter Cooper, the great philanthropist, became a partner in the latter's iron business and later married his daughter.

He became prominent in politics shortly after Tweed's downfall, was elected to Congress by Tammany in 1874, but was defeated in 1876, but drew out from Tammany the following year and declined a renomination in 1878. When Irving Hall was formed he was one of its organizers, and became its candidate for Congress in 1880, being elected in 1882 and 1884. In 1886 he was elected Mayor of New York, the two Democratic organizations burying the hatchet in order to defeat Henry George. His career as Mayor was marked by a succession of quarrels, but in spite of this he was very popular.

After his retirement from the Mayoralty he lived quietly, making his home in New Jersey, which he largely involved with the Trenton Iron Company, the New Jersey Iron and Steel Company and the Peter Cooper Glass Factory.

TO DISCUSS PLAGUE
IN SAN FRANCISCO.

BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—(Exclusive Dispatch.) Representatives of eleven State Boards of Health will meet here tomorrow for the purpose of discussing the alarming situation arising from bubonic plague in San Francisco. The meeting is to be held in response to the general call for a conference of State health officers, the necessity of which was declared in the somewhat sensational resolutions adopted at the national meeting held in New Haven last fall.

At the New Haven meeting it was declared that a disgraceful, as well as a dangerous, state of affairs existed in San Francisco, resulting from the efforts of local authorities to suppress the fact that bubonic plague exists in that city. It was declared that other cities of the United States were in danger of contamination, and that something must be done to improve the situation on the Pacific Coast.

One of the eighteen delegates to tomorrow's meeting declared that it was significant that while there were twenty-two cases of death from the plague in California in 1900 and twenty-nine in 1901, there were forty-nine in 1902. If this condition should continue, he said, other States would be obliged to consider the establishment of a quarantine against California.

When the publication of plague reports was suspended two weeks ago there was a good deal of unfavorable comment, and it was charged that the Treasury Department was cooperating with the San Francisco interests to suppress the truth of the situation. Whether as a result of this criticism or from other causes, publication of the reports was resumed in the issue of the Public Health Reports, which appeared yesterday. It shows that there was one death from bubonic plague in CHATTANOOGA, Jan. 18.—(Exclusive Dispatch.) Probably the most unusual proposition ever made by one Governor to another since the Governor of South Carolina made his observation to the Governor of North Carolina about drinks has been made by Gov. Aycock of North Carolina to Gov. Terrill of Georgia in the following letter: "If you pardon this man Chestnut, I will gladly write a pardon for any Georgian now doing time in the prisons of this State that you may designate."

Chestnut is the son of one of North Carolina's most prominent families, and in company with a pal, he robbed an express car near Macon, two years ago. Many attempts have been made to secure his pardon.

The most famous newspaper correspondent at the French capital. Born in 1832, in the Chateau of Blouitz at Plessis, he went early to Paris, where he became a teacher of German at the Lyceum, and occasionally contributed an article on literary and political subjects to the papers.

He became correspondent of the London Times, some twenty-five years.

In the official and diplomatic world at Paris, Dr. Blouitz was treated as the representative of a great power.

He entertained Kings and Princes; King Edward of England often dined at his house, and the late King of Spain never visited Paris officially or informally. He was well known in the little, fast, fat man, who was known as an absolutely safe confidant.

A princely salary from the Times and the fortune of his wife, an extremely rich woman, made him financially independent, and allowed him to be one of the social leaders of Paris. For many years he was unable to write English, and his dispatches to the Times were in French.

London's Comment.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS-P.M.

JOHANNESBURG, Jan. 18.—(Exclusive Dispatch.) In the course of his remarks at the banquet given here yesterday to Colonial Secretary Chamberlain in the historic Wanderers Hall, Chamberlain explained at length the details of financial settlement with the new colonies. The principal feature of this settlement was anounced by the Associated Press January 12.

According to further reports, Chamberlain said, after expressing his hope that the Boers would deal with the matter in a manner looking to the interest of the whole of South Africa and the empire, that all his information led him to believe that the Boers were settling down to repair their positions and to repair the damages of the war with the resolution of their race. He painted in glowing colors the promising prospects of the colonies when development shall have reduced the cost of living and when race prejudice shall have died out.

Referring to the position of the people of Johannesburg, Chamberlain said they should no longer be reproached with being cosmopolitan money-lenders, but should be regarded as the equals of the rest of the country.
